E 357 .2 .014

OBSERVATIONS

ON THE

IMPRESSMENT OF

AMERICAN SEAMEN

BY THE OFFICERS OF SHIPS OF WAR, AND VES-SELS COMMISSIONED BY, AND ACTING UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF

GREAT BRITAIN;

WITH A FEW REMARKS ON THE DOCTRINE OF

NON-EXPATRIATION.

TO WHICH IS ADDED, A CORRECT LIST OF

IMPRESSED SEAMEN,

TAKEN FROM DOCUMENTS LAID BEFORE CONGRESS.

ADDRESSED TO THE PEOPLE OF THE U. STATES,

BY A CITIZEN OF BALTIMORE.

BALTIMORE: PRINTED BY AND FOR G. DOBBIN & MURPHY, NO. 4, BALTIMORE-STREET.

180A.

OBSERVATIONS

ON THE

IMPRESSMENT OF

AMERICAN SEAMEN, &c.

"ARE ye not mark'd by all the circ'ling world As the great stake, the last effort for liberty? Say, is it not your wealth, the thirst, the food, The scope and bright ambition of your souls? Why else have you, and your renowned forefathers, From the proud summit of their glitt'ring thrones, Cast down the mightiest of your lawful kings That dared the bold infringement? what but liberty Aloof hath held invasion from your hills, And sanctified their shade? and will ye, will ye, Shrink from the hopes of the expecting world; Bid your high honors stoop to Foreign infalt, And in one hour give up to infamy

The harvest of a thousand years of glory?"

GUSTAVUS VASA.

THERE is no observation more frequently made, or more solidly sounded in truth, than that the legitimate end of every government, is the happiness and protection of the governed. In the discussion of questions of dubious policy, or abstract morality, the mind often wanders in the labyrinths of doubt and uncertainty, and its aberrations are fanctioned by the perplexing obscurity of the objects of its contemplation. But this is a position, so obvious and universal, that like a self-evident truth, it fpurns at logical deduction, and is equally imprefied, with endemic modifications, on the mind of the houseless savage and the learned civilian. Since then one of the principal ends of the inflitution of government is the protection of its citizens, it follows as a necessary consequence and corrollary, that they have an indifputable claim upon the government to vindicate their rights and liberties whenever they are invaded by foreign or domestic violence. should be remembered that every citizen, however fubordinate in the scale of the community, has an equal claim with the most powerful, to this important right, a right with which he is invested by the civil compact, and which is as virtually attached to the naturalized, as to the native citizen. These confiderations naturally occur to the mind as it reflects on the tyrannical oppression practifed on American Scamen, by ships of war and vessels, commissioned by, and acting under the authority of, Great Britain.-The magnitude of the fleets of that nation, which almost bridge the ocean, gives her an uncontrouled superiority on that element, which seems destined to be the peculiar theatre of her glorv.

"Division imperium cum Neptuno Britannia habet."
Hence she possessies the power, and seldom wants the inclination, (as her conduct towards America fufficiently evinces) to distress the commerce of neutral nations, by capturing and condemning their vessels and property, under salse and frivolous pretences, or by insticting a deadlier wound on their national prosperity, by the impressment of their seamen. The former of these injuries, to the Argus eyes of interest, has assumed of late so alarming an aspect, and is so destructive in its indiscriminate operation, of the commercial interests of our country, that it has become the subject of petition and remonstrance to the government, from every part of the union,* and forms at this moment, the most important object of congressional deliberation.

It is not, however, the intention of the writer of these remarks, to expatiate on the capture and confiscation of American property by Great Britain; nor to discuss an important question of the law of nations, arising out of, and necessarily connected with, the extraordinary inhibitions of that power: Abler pens, and more enlightened minds are engaged in the toilsome investigation, and will no doubt illicit truth from the collision of argument. But he begs leave to offer a few remarks on the impressment, and forcible detention, by the British, of our useful and brave fellow-citizens, the seamen of America. Deeply impressed, with the importance of the subject, and sincerely lamenting the indignities offered to our country, of which, indeed, every day, as it passes, furnishes some new and humiliating examples; he will give his observations, defective as they may appear, openly and without reserve to the public:—He has no personal injuries to complain of, no party interest to promote, no private resentment to gratify: and trusts that his remarks will be read as they are written, with candor and impartiality.

* Witness the memorials from Boston, Salem, New-York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk, Charleston, &c.

In the possession of a vast extent of fertile territory, it has ever been the policy of the government of the United States, to encourage emigration from all parts of the globe; a benign and happy policy: which offers to the oppressed and unfortunate of all nations, fecurity under mild and equal laws, and ample fcope for honest exertion. This, as we shall hereafter endeavour to shew, was not a novel procedure in the hiffory of nations, nor a measure peculiar to, nor devifed by, the United States. Naturalization and denization are equally known and fanctioned in Europe, whence, in fact, the idea of the measure was borrowed by America. In pursuance of this policy, the general government declared by feveral acts,* (altered and amended at different periods) that emigrants from foreign countries to the United States, after a certain probationary refidence, and complying with the requisitions of faid acts, should be admitted to the rights and privileges of American citizens.

It is scarcely necessary to state, that in consequence of the encouragement and protection held out to emigrants by our government, thousands of our poor and oppressed fellow men, embraced the pleasing offer of peace and fecurity in our country, and fled from the devastations of that storm, which for thirteen years, with one temporary intermission, has darkened and defolated Europe. America became the ark of repose for the wearied and oppressed of that devoted quarter of the world, where war and devastation stalk hand in hand, through uncultivated fields and deferted villages. A great part of those who thus emigrated to our shores, were admitted in due feason to the rights of citizenship. American government became bound in duty and in honor, to extend the same protection to her naturalized, as to her native citizens. For the instanz that they are admitted to the rights of citizenship. the national faith becomes pledged for the affertion and maintainance of their rights and liberties, as citizens of the United States.

* See the Acts of Congress

The rapidity with which the wealth and commerce of America have increased, since her separation from Great Britain, a rapidity unequalled in the history of nations, has far exceeded the hopes of her friends, and the calculations of her rivals. The sun does not shine on a corner of the commercial world where her slag is not displayed, nor the winds raise a wave, which is not cleft by her keels. Her importance among nations was commensurate with her domestic property, and surveying, from a far, the war and tumult which were rending Europe asunder, and contemplating, with gratitude to the divine author of all good, the diftinguished bleffing of her own security, the might exclaim in the language of the poet.

Suave, mari magno turbantibus æquora ventis, E terra, magnum alterius spectare laborem : Non quia vexari quemquam est jucunda voluptas, Sed quibus ipfe malis careas, quia cernere fuave eft."*

Lucretius Book 2d.

The increase of her native population, however, could not keep pace with the increase of her commerce; nature having fixed limits to the multiplication, though not to the enterprize, of man. demand for feamen increased as her commerce extended itself, her native failors could not supply the demand; wages rose to an uncalculated height; and the deficiency in the crews of her merchant vessels. was supplyed, in many instances, by foreigners and emigrants to America; among whom were fome native born subjects of the king of Great Britain, who fought to ameliorate their condition by renouncing their country for ours, and becoming citizens of the United States.

Great Britain, envious of the growing greatness of America, or unwilling that she should participate in branches of commerce which the confidered her exclusive property, (for what other construction can * " 'Tis pleafant, when the feas are rough, to stand And view another's danger, fafe at land; Not 'caufe he's troubled, but 'tis fweet to fee Those cares and fears, from which ourselves are free. Creech's Translation. reason give to her conduct) commenced a system of outrage and depredation on the American slag. for which a parallel must be sought in the history of barbarous and savage nations.

Her ships of war boarded our vessels on the high seas, and in the harbours of friendly nations, treated their officers with the most contemptuous abuse, intimidated them by threats of personal violence, which in many instances, were carried into essect, and tyrannically impressed their crews, which by the law of nations are protected by a neutral slag. Instances are not unsrequent, in which they have less the officers of vessels, exposed to the danger of the seas for want of hands to navigate their ship, or to perisse on that element for want of food, being rendered incapable of making any port whatsoever, on account of the loss of their crews. To justify these extra-

* The writer of these remarks can safely state, without the danger of contradiction, that in the month of March or April in the year 1801, an American captain, in the island of St. Bartholomews, (then lately captured by Admiral Duckworth) was taken out of his own vessel, which he had chartered to the British government, to bring water from St. Kitts for the use of the British troops, and carried on board an English sloop of war there in the harbour, and was, by order or her russian commander, (Younghusband+) without any cause or provocation whatever, tied to a gun, and received 20 or 30 lashes from a boatswain's mate. He applied for redress, and, as might be expected, obtained none.

† This fellow, we hear, has fince been promoted to the command of a frigate.

ordinary violations of the rights of a neutral and friendly nation, Great Britain, ever prolific in expedients, had recourse to the subtlety and finess of her civilians. Thoselegal conduit pipes, through which the will of the government is conveyed, declared, That the right of expatriation never existed but in the imaginations of modern innovators. That no British subject could renounce his allegiance to his king, by any act of his own, not even by swearing allegiance to another power; that the king has a constitutional right to the physical exertions of his subjects in time of war, and in every emergency in which he may think proper to command them. And confequently that the commanders of British ships of war were fustified in examining the crews of the veffels of neutral nations on the high feas, and impressing all perfons found on board of them who were natives of any part of his Britannic majesty's dominions. A doctrine so tyrannical in principle, so unsupported by reason, and so restrictive of the natural freedom of man, scarcely deserves the respect of resutation. However, fince it has received the fanction of a judicial decission* in our country, a decission which

* On the trial of Isaac Williams, in the district court of Connecticut, February 27, 1797, for accepting a commission under the French Republic, and under the authority thereof committing acts of hostility against Great Britain, the defendant alledged, and offered to prove that he had expatriated himself from the United States, and become a French citizen before the commencement of the war between France and England. This produced a question as to the right of expatriation; when Judge every American, and every friend to humanity must read with indignation, we will beg leave to make a few observations, and quote the opinions of a few but resepectable writers on the subject to shew, that this doctrine stands as unsupported by authority, as it is repugnant to natural reason. Among the cevilians of that nation who have laboured to interpolate this singular doctrine into the code of Ellsworth, then chief justice of the United States, it said to have delivered an opinion nearly to the following effect.

" The common law of this country remains the same as it was before the revolution. The prefent question is to be decided by two great principles; one is, that all the members of a civil community are bound to each other by compact; the other is, that one of the parties to this compact cannot dissolve it by his own act. The compact between our community and it's members is, that the community shall protect it's members, and on the part of the members, that they will at all times be obedient to the laws of the community, and faithful in it's defence. It neceffarily refults that the members cannot dissolve this compact, without the confent or default of the community. There has been no consent-no default. Express consent is not claimed; but it is argued that the confent of the community is implied, by it's policy-it's conditions-and it's acts. In countries fo crouded with inhabitants, that the means of subfishence are difficult to be obtained, it is reason and policy to permit emigration; but our policy is different; for our country is but fearcely fettled, and we have no inhabitants to spare.

"Confent has been argued from the condition of the country, because we were in a state of peace. But though we were in peace, the war had commenced in Europe. We wished to have nothing to do with the war; but the war would have something to do with us. It has been extremely difficult for us nations, the learned judge Blackstone is the most eminent, and will therefore command our attention. "It is a principle of universal law (says that skilful jurist) that the natural born subject of one prince cannot by any act of his own, no not even by swearing allegiance to another; put off, or discharge his natural allegiance to the former."

Blac. Com. vol. 1, page 369.

Mr. Tucker, the erudite annotator on Blackstone's Commentaries, in his refutation of the principle here laid down, informs us on the authority of Plato, that at Athens it was lawful for every man, after he had to keep out of this war; the progress of it has threatened to involve us. It has been necessary for our government to be vigilant in restraining our own citizens from those acts which would involve us in hostilities. The most visionary writers on this subject do not contend for the principle in the unlimited extent, that a citizen may, at any, and at all times, renounce his own, and join himself to a foreign country.

"Confent has been argued from the acts of our government permitting the naturalization of foreigners. When a foreigner prefents himfelf here, we do not inquire what his relations is to his own country; we have not the means of knowing, and the inquiry would be indelicate; we leave him to judge of that. If he embarraffes himfelf by contracting contradictory obligations, the fault and folly are his own; but this implies no confent of the government that our own citizens should also expatriate themselves. It is, therefore my opinion, that these facts which the prisoner offers to prove, in his defence, are totally irrelevant," &c. The prisoner was accordingly found guilty, fined and imprisoned. See the account of his trial, National Magazine, No. 3, p. 254. I prefume not to answer for the correctness of it. Tucker's Blac.

examined the laws and customs of the Republic, it he did not approve of them, to quit the city, and retire where he pleased with his effects.* By the constitution of the Roman Commonwealth, no citizen could be forced to leave the Commonwealth; or, if he pleased not to leave it, when he was made a member of another which he preferred to it. therefore Cicero fays, that a little before his rementbrance, feveral citizens of Rome, men of credit and fortunes, voluntarily left that, and fettled themselves in other commonwealths. And the way, fays he, lies open from every state to ours, and from ours to every other. This right he extols in the most emphatic manner. "What noble rights!+ which by the bleffing of Heaven have been enjoyed by us and our ancestors ever fince the state begun, that none of us should be forced to leave our country, or stay in it against our will. This is the immoveable foundation of our liberty, that every man is master of his own right, and may keep it, or refign it as he pleafes."1 Thefe inftances, fays Mr. Tucker, which are cited by Puffendorf* on this subject, prove at least that this principle was neither to be found in the Athenian or Roman institutions.

* Tucker's Blackstone, part 2d, vol. 1, page 190.

† O jura præclara, atque divinitus jam inde á principio Romani nominis á majoribus nostris comparata, nequis mostrûm plus quam uniue Civitatis esse posit, nequis invitus Civitate mutetur; néve in Civitate maneat invitus. Hac sunt sundamenta sirmissima nostræ libertatis, sui quemquam juris et retinendi et dimittendi esse doimnum. Oratio pro L. Cornelio Balbo.

‡ Tucker's Blac. part 2d. vol. 1. appendix, page 191, and Barlemaqui, Natural Law, 2d part, page 95.

Vattel† who discusses this question with his accustomed logical precision, says, there are cases in which a citizen has an absolute right to renounce his country and abandon it entirely. If the citizen cannot procure subsistence in his own country he is doubtless permitted to seek it in another. For the political or civil society being entered into only with a view of facilitating to each the means of living in happiness and safety, it would be absurd to pretend that a number whom it cannot furnish with such things as are most necessary, has not a right to leave it.‡ And again, the right of emigration may arise from several sources.

After adducing many inflances in which the right of emigration (or as it is called, expatriation) is fecured to the subject, Vattel proceeds to state the various customs of some modern nations in this respect. The citizens of Neuschatel and Valengen, in Switzerland, may quit the country and carry off their essects in what manner they please; a citizen of Berne may,

* Law of Nature and Nations, Book 8, Chap 11.

† &quot;One of the most correct professors of public law." Sir William Scott, in the judgment in the case of the Swedish ship Maria, High Court of Admiralty, 1799.

‡ Vattel's Law of Nations, Book 1, ch. 19, fec. 223

§ Ibid, fec. 225.

at the pleases, remove to Fribourg, and reciprocally, a citizen of Fribourg may go and settle at Bern, and he has a right to take all his essects with him.* On the other hand it appears from several historical sacts, particularly in the history of Switzerland, and the neighbouring countries, that the law of nations, established there by custom for some years past, does not permit a state to receive the subjects of another state into the number of its citizens. This vicious custom, says Vattel, had no other soundation than the slavery to which the people were then reduced. A Prince, a Lord, considered his subjects in the rank of his property and riches, he calculated their number as he did his slocks, and to the disgrace of human nature, this strange abuse is not yet every where destroyed.†

Burlemaqui, treating of the duties and rights of citizens, delivers his opinion on this subject as follows: It is a right natural to all free people, that every one should have the liberty of removing out of the Commonwealth, if he thinks proper. In a word, when a man becomes a member of a state, he does not for that reason entirely renounce the care of himself and his own affairs. On the contrary he seeks a powerful protection, under the shelter of which he may procure to himself both the necessaries and conveniences of life. Thus the subjects of a state cannot be denied the liberty of settling elsewhere, in order to procure the advantages which they do not find in their native country.* And again,+ some make a que flion whether subjects can go out of the flate in great companies? In this point Grotius and Puffendort are of opposite sentiments. † As for my own part (he continues) I am of opinion, that it can hardly happen that fubjects should go out of the state in large companies, except in one of the two following cases: either when the government is tyrannical, or when a multitude of people cannot subfift in the country; as when manufacturers, for example, or other tradesmen cannot find the means of making or distributing their commodities. In these circumstances, the subjects may retire if they will, and they are authorized fo to do, by virtue of a tacit exception. If the government is tyrannical it is the duty of the fovereign to change his conduct, for no subject is obliged to live under tyranny. If mifery forces them to remove, this is also a reasonable exception against the most express engagements.§

* Vattel, book 1, ch. 19, sec. 225, and Tucker's Blackstone, part 2d, vol. 1, appendix, page 92. † Ibil.

The profound Mr. Locke, than whom no higher authority can be produced on this or any other fubject that once engaged his inquisitive research, positively denies the existence of a right in governments

* Burlemaqui's Natural and Political Law, vol. 2, part 2 ch. 5, sec. 12. † Ibid, sec. 16.

‡ Grotius of the Right of War and Peace, Book 2d, ch. 4, fec. 24; and Puffendorf of the Law of Nature and Nations, book 8, ch. 11, fec. 4.

<sup>6</sup> Burlemaqui, vol. 2, part 2d, ch. 5, sec. 16.

To prohibit the emigration of their subjects or citi-There are no examples, fays he, fo frequent in history, both facred and profane, as those of men withdrawing themselves and their obedience from the jurisdiction they were born under, and the family or community they were bred up under, and fetting up new governments in other places.*/This has been the practice of the world from the first beginning to this day-nor is it now any more hindrance to the freedom of men, that they are born under conflituted and ancient politics, that have eftablished laws and set forms of government, than if they were born in the woods, amongst the unconfined inhabitants that run loofe in them. For those who would perfude us, that by being born under any government, we are naturally subjects of it, and have no more any title or pretence to the freedom of the state of nature, have no other reason, (bating that of parental authority) to produce for it, but only because our fathers or progenitors passed away their natural liberty, and thereby bound up themselves and their posterity to a perpetual subjection to the government which they themselves submitted to. It is true, that whatever engagements or promifes any one made for himself, he is under the obligation of them, but cannot, by any compact whatfoever, bind his children or posterity.* For his son, when a man, being altogether as free as the father, any act of the father can no more give away the liberty of the son, than it can of any body else. He may indeed annex such conditions to the land he enjoyed as a subject of any commonwealth, as may oblige his son to be of that community, if he will enjoy those possessions which were his father's; because the estate being the father's property, he may dispose or settle it as he pleases.†

* Essay on Civil Government, book ad. section 115.-London edition, 1689.

And this has generally given the occasion to the mistake in this matter, because commonwealths not permitting any of their dominions to be dismembered, nor to be enjoyed by any but those of their community, the son cannot ordinarily enjoy the possessions of his father, but under the same terms his father did, by becoming a member of the society—whereby he puts himself presently under the government he finds there established, as much as any other subject of that commonwealth. And thus the consent of freemen, born under governments, which only makes them members of it, being given separately in their turns, as each comes to be of age, and not in a multitude together; people take no notice of it, and thinking it not done at all, or not necessary, <sup>**</sup> Alfo Grotius.—" By the bare law of nature, no man is bound by the fact of another, but he that inherits his goods." Book 3d. ch. 2d.

† Locke, Essay on Civ. Govern. b. 2d. sec. 116.

conclude that they are naturally subjects as they are men.*

In the case of Talbut against Janson, + decided in the supreme court of the United States, at August term, 1705, in which the right of expatriation was ably discussed, it was contended for the appellant, as follows; -" The right of expatriation is antecedent and fuperior to the law of fociety. It is implied, likewife, in the nature and object of the focial compact, which was formed to shield the weakness, and to supply the wants of individuals-to protect the acquifitions of human industry, and to promote the means of human happiness. Whenever these purposes fail, either the whole fociety is disfolved, or the fuffering individuals are permitted to withdraw from There are two memorable instances of the expatriation of entire nations (independent of the general course of the patriarchal or pastoral life) the one in ancient, and the other in modern story. When the Persians approached Athens, the whole Athenian nation embarked in the fleet of Themistocles, and left Attica, for a time, in possession of the Persians. (Plut. in Vit. Themist. Trav. of Anachar. 1 vol. page 268.)

In the year 1771 a whole nation of Tartars, called

* Locke, fec. 117.

† See this case reported at length in Dallas's Reports, vol. 3d. We do not quote the whole argument, which is prolix, but only such parts of it as were considered most applicable to our subject.

"Tourgouths," making fifty thousand families, or three hundred thousand souls, emigrated from the banks of the Wolga, in Russia, and, after a progress of inconceivable difficulty, fettled in the dominions of the emperor of China, who hospitably received them, and erected a monument on the spot, to commemorate the event. (Col. Mag. for Feb. 1788)-But the abstract right of individuals to withdraw from the fociety of which they are members, is recognized by an uncommon coincidence of opinion-by eevery writer, ancient and modern; by the civilian, as well as by the Common Law Lawyer; by the Philosopher as well as the Poet-it is the law of Nature and of Nature's God, pointing to "the wide world before us, where to chuse our place of rest, and Providence our guide."-(2 Bynk. 125. Wickfont, b. 1 c. 2 p. 116. Grot. b. 2. 5. § 24 et elii.) With this law however, human inflitutions have been often at variance; and no inflitutions more than the feudal fystem, which made the tyranny of arms the basis of foriety; chained men to the foil on which they were born; and converted the bulk of mankind into the villeins, or flaves of a lord, or fuperior. From the feudal fystem, sprung the law of allegiance; which purfuing the nature of its origin, rests on lands; for when lands were all held of the crown, then the oath of allegiance became appropriate: it was the tenure of the tenant or vaffal. (Blac. Com. 366) The oath of fealty, and the ancient cast of allegiance, were, almost the same; both resting on lands; both defignating the person to whom service should be rendered; though the one makes an exception as to the fuperior Lord, while the other is an obligation of fidelity against all men. (Black. Com. 2. 53. Pal. 140) Service, therefore, was also an inseparable concomitant of fealty, as well as of allegiance. The oath of fealty could not be violated without the loss of the lands; and as all the lands were held mediately, or immediately, of the fovereign, a violation of the oath of allegiance, was, in fact, a voluntary submiffion to a state of outlawry. Hence arose the doctrine of perpetual and univerfal allegiance. When, however, the light of reason was shed upon the human mind, the intercourse of man became more general and more liberal; the military was gradually changed for the commercial state; and the laws were found a better protection for persons and property, than arms. But even while the practical administration of government was thus reformed, fome portion of the ancient theory was preserved; and among the other things, the doctrine of perpetual allegiance remained, with the fictitious tenure of all lands from the crown to support it. Yet, it is to be remembered, that whether in its real origin, or in its artificial state, allegiance as well as fealty rests upon lands, and it is due to persons. Not so, with respect to citizenthip, which has arisen from the dissolution of the feudal system; and is a substitute for allegiance corresponding with the new order of things. ance and citizenship differ, indeed, in almost every characteristic. Citizenship is the effect of compact; allegiance is the offspring of power and necessity. Citizenship is a political tie; allegiance is a territorial tenure. Citizenship is the charter of equality; allegiance is a badge of inseriority. Citizenship is constitutional; allegiance is personal. Citizenship is freedom; allegiance is servitude. Citizenship is communicable; allegiance is repulsive.

Among the nations, in which the law of allegiance is most firmly established, the most pertinaciously enforced, there are firiking deviations that demonstrate the invincible power of truth, and the homage, which under every modification of government, must be paid to the inherent rights of man. In Russia the volunteers who supply the fleet with officers, or literary institutions with professors, are naturalized in Poland; an American citizen has been made chancellor to the crown. In France, Mr. Sartine, who was minister of Marine, and Mr. Necker, who was Minister of Finance, were adopted, not native subjects. In England, two years service in the navy, ipso facto, endows an alien with all the rights of a native. These are tacit acknowledgements of the right of expatriation vested in the individuals; for though they are instances of adopting, not of discharging subjects; yet, if Great-Britain would (ex gratia) protect a Russian naturalized by fervice, in her fleet, it is obvious that fbe cannot do fo without recognizing his right of expatriation to be Superior to the Empress's right of allegiance. But it is not only in a negative way that these deviations in support of the general right appear. The doctrine is, that allegiance cannot be due to two sovereigns; and taking an oath of allegiance to a new, is the strongest evidence of withdrawing allegiance from a previous sovereign. Thus Lewis XIX. received his own quondam subjects, the two Fidlers, as ambassadors. Dr. Story, an Englishman, was sent to England as the minister of Spain. And in many nations the conditions on which an expatriation may be effected (such as paying a tax, or leaving a portion of property behind) are actually prescribed.

To purfue the subject one step further: A man cannot owe allegiance to two sovereigns, I Blac. Com. he cannot be a citizen of two nations. If a man has a right to expatriate, and another nation has a right and disposition to adopt him, it is a compact between the two parties, consummated by the oath of allegiance. A man's last will, as to his citizenship, may be likened to his last will, as to his estate, it supercedes every former disposition; and when either takes essect, the party in one case, is naturally dead, in the other, he is civilly dead; but in both cases, as good Christians and good Republicans, it must be presumed he rises to another, if not to a better life and country."

To this eloquent and irrefistable argument, which does honor to the tongue that uttered it, and the pen that recorded it, it would be arrogant to subjoin any remarks of our own; we will only observe in recapitulation of the reasoning contained in it, and in the writings of the civilians herein before quoted, that every man is invested by the law of nature, with the right to emigrate from the country or state in which he was born, and withdraw himself from the jurisdiction of any civil establishment or society in which he may have been bred,* in order to promote his own happiness and welfare. That this is one of the most important rights with which he is invested by his Creator, at his birth, and is a right of which he can never be lawfully deprived. That the exclusive right of property being a creature of civil or positive law, may be affected by the fame means by which it was created by the lex loci where it is enjoyed: but liberty as well as life being the immediate gift of God, and a right strictly natural, can never be lawfully restrained but by the confent of the individual, expressly by his voluntarily becoming a member of a civil establishment, or by any other mode by which his confent is declared. And in the case where the consent of the individual is afcertained, the power which a prince may exercife over his lands and possessions, cannot be construed to give him any right over his person: Neither can a prince or government in whose territories a man happens to be born, claim any right to detain him therein, merely because he first saw the light there, as

(

* Si qui exire (civitate) volunt, consulere fibi possunt. Cicero

Mr. Locke has most clearly shewn, the most that he can do, is to prohibit him from carrying his property with him; which if lands he cannot, and if goods he may not, (if the laws of the state forbid it) carry away without the consent of the government.*

Mr. Tucker, who displays in his examination of this doctrine of non-expatriation, the liberal fentiments of a philanthropist, and the laborious research of a scholar, concludes his remarks on this subject as sollows: "From the whole that we have seen, it appears that the right of emigration, or as I rather choose to call it, expatriation, is a right strictly natural." Deplorable indeed would be the condition of humanity, if the converse of this proposition were established. The beasts of the field and the tenants of the forest might then, with reason, boast of a superiority over the pseudo lord of the universe; and man, proud man, would find himself the only being in creation whose wanderings are limited, or whose freedom is restrained.

* Tuck. Blac. vol. 2, part 1. † Ibid, page 96.

The writer of these remarks acknowledges with pleasure, that he has derived much information on this subject from Mr. Tucker's learned note before referred to, entitled, "The Doctrine of Expatriation Considered." He has chosen, in many instances, to make use of Mr. Tucker's own words, as the judicious observations of that venerable judge on this subject, would suffer by being clothed in any language but his own.

It is therefore evident that this doctrine of non-expatriation has, as we have shewn, neither the fanction of reason nor authority to support it: that it is set up in direct contradiction to the opinions of the most respectable and prosound civilians of Europe, of Vattel and Burlimaqui, of Puffendorf and Looke: that it must be classed among the many unjustishable expedients of Great Britain, to aggrandise her ambition at the expence of justice: and finally, that it can never be considered as establishing a right on which to found a legitimate reclamation by that power, of persons who were born in the dominions of his Britannic Majesty, but who have, agreeably to our municipal laws, become citizens of the United States.

Great Britain, however afferts, that many of her natural born fubjects, employed in our merchant fervice, were never admitted to the privileges of American citizens; and confequently, that although the doctrine of expatriation were univerfally recognifed (which she declares she never will accede to) she still retains a right to search for and seize such her subjects.

To this it may be answered, first, that the circumflance of their emigrating from their own country and domiciliating themselves in ours, is a sufficient, though tacit manifestation of their intention of incorporating themselves with our citizens, and relying on our government for protection when sailing in American yessels. Secondly, that a neutral slag on the high feas has ever been confidered a safeguard to those failing under it, who are not enemies in military fervice to the belligerent fearcher. The general freedom of the high feas and of neutral veffels navigating them has long been admitted by the general confent of nations, with such exceptions only as are annexed to it by the law of nations. And this general freedom of the high feas cannot be more ftrongly proved than by the exceptions which the law of nations, in certain cases, has made to it. Exceptio probat regulam. Great Britain must then produce fuch an exception in the law of nations (in which law she as a nation has long acquiesced, and by which she must be bound) in favour of the right she contends for, or must shew that it is secured to her by treaty or stipulation. We believe, however, that she will fearch in vain for such an exception, referving to her this right, and that she will find it in no usuage but her own.

The law of nations has established that neutral stags do not protest certain objects denominated contraband of war,* including enemies serving in the war,

* That the commerce of neutral nations may subsist in all the freedom which the laws of war will admit, there are rules to be observed, and on which Europe seems generally to be agreed. Commodities particularly used in war, and the importation of which to an enemy is prohibited, are called contraband of war. Such are arms, military and naval stores, borses, and even provisions in certain junctures, where there are hopes of reducing the enemy by famine—Vattel, book 3, ch. 7. These are some nor articles going into a blockaded port, nor enemys property of any kind.* But no where is to be found, as our fecretary of flate justly observes, an exception to this freedom of the sees, and of neutral flags, which can justify the taking away any person, not an enemy in military service, found on board a neutral vessel.

Here then we join issue with the advocates of this principle, and call upon them to produce, in the code of nations, a single exception, by which this pretended right to impress the crews of neutral vessels is secured to a nation in time of peace or war. We positively deny that such an exception exists, and the burthen of proof, from the relative situation of Great Britain and America, and the nature of the claim, necessarily rests on the former. We believe, of the exceptions to the general freedom of neutral vessels on the Ligh seas. But we fearch in vain in the works of this able civilian, and of the other writers on this subject, for an exception in favour of the right claimed by Great Britain.

7 Effects belonging to an enemy, founed on board a neutral fhip, are feizable by the rights of war; but by the laws of nature the mafter is to be paid his freight, and not to fuffer by the feizure. Ibid.

And Bynkerstrook, "ratione consulta, non sum qui videam, cur non liceret capere res bossiles quamvis in navi amica repertas, id enim capio, quod hossium est, quodque jure belli victori cedit. Questionum Juris Pulici, liber 1, ch. 14.

† But he fays nothing of the right to imprefs persons sound. en board.

however, that the labor of refearch, the diffortion of principle, or the fubtlety of argument will avail her nothing. The law of nature and reason, stand forth to oppose her. Sophistry may mislead and credulity may be abused, but reason, like its divine author, will be eternally the same.

The right of belligerents to vifit neutral vessels at sea, though controverted by many nations, at different periods,* is not at this time denied by America. It is therefore not a matter of irrelevant inquiry what are the ends intended to be accomplished by this right of visitations and what is the nature and extent of this right?

Sir William Scott in the judgment pronounced by him in the case of the ship Maria,* in the High * Il fut determiné (dans les 14 me et 15 me siècles) qu'on n'auroit plus égard au propriétaire de la cargaison, mais à celuidu vaisseau; qu'un vaisseau neutre ne pourroit plus être arrête parce qu'il auroit a board des marchandises enemies, & cucore moins parce qu'il seroit destiné pour quelque port ennemi.

Schlegel.

See also the convention for the re-establishment of an armed neutrality, between his majesty the king of Sweden, of the one part, and his majesty the emperor of all the Russias on the other part, concluded and signed at St. Petersburgh, the 4th (16th) December, 1800, accepted and ratisfied by his Swedish majesty on the 20th of December, and by his imperial majesty of all the Russias on the 2th (20th) December, in the same year.

† This was one of a fleet of Swedish merchantmen, carrying pitch, tar, hemp, deals, and iron, to several ports of France, Portugal, and the Mediterranean, and taken, January, 1798, sailing under convoy of a ship of war; and proceedee against for resistance of visitation and search by British cruizers.

Court of Admiralty, 11th June, 1799, affigns the reasons for the existence of this right, and accurately "This right, faye Sir William, defines its limits. of visiting and fearching merchant ships upon the high feas, whatever be the ships, whatever be the cargoes, whatever be the destination, is an incontestable right of the lawfully commissioned cruizers of a belligerent nation. I fay, be the ships, the cargoes and the destinations what they may; because till they are visited and searched it does not appear what the ships, or the cargoes,* or the destinations are; and it is for the purpose of ascertaining these points, that the necessity of this right of visitation and fearch exists. The right must unquestionably be exercised with as little of personal harshness and vexation in the mode as possible; but soften it as much as you can, it is fill a right of force.

In this folemn and premeditated declaration of the grounds and extent of the right of visitation in belligerents, made by the ablest civilian now living in Great Britain, and who, from his official situation cannot be considered very willing to extend the privileges of neutrals, or abridge those of belligerents; it is most clearly laid down, that the right exists for the purposes (and it may fairly be inferred for the purposes only) of ascertaining what are the ships, what are their cargoes, and what are their destinations.

* Will it be contended that seamen are included in the word accargoes?"

If this right had been referved by the law of nations for another important purpose, viz. for the purpose of impressing the natural born subjects of the power to whom the belligerent searcher belongs, would the circumspect, the erudite, the didactic Sir William Scott, presiding in the highest court of admiralty jurisdiction in his country, and vindicating and stretching the privileges of belligerents, while the eyes of Europe were turned towards him, have omitted to enumerate this, one of the most important purposes, for which this right of visitation was reserved? Let those who are acquainted with the depth of his erudition, the retention of his memory, and the capacity of his mind, answer the question.

Let us now advert to treaties, and endeavor to discover in them a reservation of this right of impressment, which is searched for in vain in the law of nations.

In the treaty of Paris, concluded between Great Britain and the United States on the 13th of Nov. 1782, not a word is to be found, relating in any manner to this important claim. By the Treaty of Amity, Commerce and Navigation, between his Britannic Majesty and the United States of America, signed at London the 19th November, 1794, it was stipulated by the twenty-eighth article, "That his Majesty and the United States on mutual requisition, by them respectively, or by their respective ministers or officers authorised to make the same, will deliver up to justine tice all persons, who, being charged with murder or forgery, shall seek an asylum within any of the countries of the other, provided that this shall only be done on such evidence of criminality, as, according to the laws of the place wherein the sugitive or person so charged shall be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial, if the offence had there been committed."*

This is the only instance in which Great Britain has referved a right to claim any of her subjects who have emigrated to the United States. And it is allowed her by the treaty, in this particular instance, for the best of reasons, and for the most salutary purposes; for the punishment of such as have, by their crimes, forfeited all claim to that protection from society. to which every other member of it is entitled. But surely we will not be told, that it reserves to Great Britain a right to impress the crews of our merchant vessels, or that she has a right, under this article of the treaty, to claim or forcibly take any of her former subjects, by sea or land, but such as have been guilty of murder or forgery.

It is a maxim of reason as well as of law, and a faithful guide for interpretation, that "defignatio unius est exclusio alterius." Every right, therefore, to claim or seize her sugitive subjects, which Eng-

* If the treaties of Great Britain with the different nations of Europe be examined, it will be found, that she has not, in a single instance, reserved in any of them the right she cuntends for.

Land wished to referve, she has, by the above article expressly reserved.* Every right which she has not thereby reserved, and which is not secured to a belligerent by the law of nations, she has thereby virtually disclaimed and disavowed.

Whether, therefore, we fearch for the foundation of this claim in the law of nations, which is a rule independent of compact, by which the fovereigns of the civilized world confent to be governed, or examine the treaties and flipulations of Great Britain, with our own or other governments, it equally cludes our most inquisitive investigation. It is in fact, a foundling unknown among nations since the abolition of the feudal system, but adopted by Great Britain as the legitimate offspring of royal prerogative.

It is not our intention to examine the right exercised by Great Britain of impressing her own integration in her own territories. We do not wish to multiply quotations, nor to tire our readers with trite or uninteresting disquisitions. It might, however, afford entertainment as well as instruction to observe, for a moment, the obvious contrariety of opinion discernible in the writings of English lawyers on this subject.

"As to the impressing of seamen, it is strange that its lawfulness should ever be called in question by any person who has read our history or statute book. The crown has been in possession of it from time immemorial." Molloy de jure Maritimo et Navali, vol. 1, ch. 6, page 139.

* That is, every right, except those rights secured to belligers onto by the law of nations and the rights of war.

From the positive manner in which Molloy afferts the existence of this right, we might be led to believe, that English writers, at least, were unanimously agreed on this subject. It will be found, however, that the contrary is the fact—Sir Edward Cooke, (who it is to be supposed read the history of England and the statute book) says, 2 Inst. page 47, "the king cannot fend any subject, against his will, out of the realm, not even into Ireland, for then under pretence of service, he might send him into banishment."

In Hails' Pleas of the crown, it is declared, "repugnant to the liberty of an Englishman, and irreconcileable to the established rules of law, that a man, without any offence by him committed, or any law to authorise it, should be hurried away like a criminal from his friends and family, and carried by force into a dangerous service." Vol. 2, page 679.

This right then has been called in question, "by those who had read the history of England and the statute book."

That the crown has not been in possession of this right "from time immemorial," is sufficiently proved by the parliament having passed different statutes at different periods, giving to the sovereign a special power to impress soldiers and seamen.* These statutes were of temporary duration, and expired at the period limited for their continuance. If the crown had been in possession of this right from time immemorial, it was superstuous to pass statutes confirmatory of a right already inherent in the crown: if it was not by custom or common law an appendage of regal prerogative, then it was created by, and expired with the statutes.

Let us here pause, and pausing let us reslect on the errors and inconsistencies which bewilder the mind, and mislead the understanding of man, when once he departs from the plain road of common sense, and shuts his eyes to the lights of truth and natural reason.

We have now in a curfory manner, examined whether this right, contended for by Great Britain, of impressing persons on the high seas, from neutral vessels, be warranted by the law of nations; that is, by those principles of natural law and reason, which are relative to the conduct of nations; such as are approved by the most eminent civilians, and practised by states the most enlightened and refined. We have referred to her treaty with our own and foreign

<sup>* 16</sup> Charles I. ch. XXIII. XXVI.

<sup>2</sup> and 3 Ann, ch. 6, fec. 16.

<sup>3</sup> and 4 do. ch. XI.

<sup>4</sup> do. ch. X.

<sup>5</sup> do. ch. XV.

<sup>6</sup> do, ch. X.

governments, and can, no where discover, even the shadow of a reason supporting her claim: indeed, like a point in mathematicks, it has neither length, breadth, nor thickness; and may, not unaptly be compared to the imaginary horizon, formed by the delusion of the eye, which exists but in fancy, and slies as it is pursued.

But even were Great Britain entitled to the fervices of her natural born fubjects, who have withdrawn themfelves from her jurisdiction, and renounced any pre-existing allegiance to her, (which fhe is not, as we have flewn, and on the best grounds) yet her claim becomes peculiarly inadmissible, when we examine the mode in which it is enforced, and view it in its confequences and effects. She profeffes to claim only fuch perfons as were born in the British dominious, and yet indiscriminately seizes on board our veffels, American as well as English feamen. And as the number of the latter employed in our navigation bears but a very fmall proportion indeed to the former, she impresses at least sifteen Americans for one Englishman. To prove this we affert, on the authority of a report of our secretary of state to congress, that during the late war " two thousand fifty-nine seamen had been impressed by Great Britain, from American vessels. Of which number one bundred and two feamen only were proved to be British fubjects, which is less than one twentieth of the number impressed. Eleven hundred and forty-two were erdered to be discharged as not being British number, leaving eight hundred and five for further proof, with the strongest presumption that the greater part, if not the whole, were Americans, or other aliens, whose proof of citizenship had been lost or destroyed, or whose situation would account for the dissiculties and delays in producing it. So that it is certain, that for all the British seamen gained by this violent proceeding, more than an equal number were the victims; it is highly probable, that for every British seaman so gained, a number of others, not less than ten for one, must have been the victims; and it is even possible that this number may have exceeded the proportion of twenty to one."*

We cannot more forcibly shew the injustice of this practice, so long continued by Great Britain, or more feelingly portray the hardships and miseries produced by it, than by quoting the words of our secretary of state, from the letter before referred to. And we are happy in being able to substitute the ideas of so enlightened a mind on this important subject, in the place of any which might occur to our own.

"Taking reason and justice, says Mr. Madison, for the tests of this practice (of impressing seamen from American vessels) it is peculiarly indesensible; because it deprives the dearest rights of persons of a regular trial, to which the most inconsiderable article of property, captured on the high feas, is entirled : and leaves their destiny to the will of an officer, sometimes cruel, often ignorant, and generally interested by his want of mariners, in his own decisions. Whenever property found in a neutral veffel is supposed to be liable on any grounds to capture and condemnation, the rule in all cases is, that the question shall not be decided by the captor, but be carried before a legal tribunal, where a regular trial may be had, and where the captor himself is liable to damages for an abuse of his power. Can it be reasonable then, or just, that a belligerent commander who is thus restricted, and thus responsible, in a cause of mere property of trivial amount thould be permitted, without recurring to any tribunal whatever, to examine the crew of a neutral vessel, to decide the important question of their respective allegiance, and to carry that important decision into instant execution, by forcing every individual he may chuse into a service abhorrent to his feelings, cutting him off from his most tender connections, exposing his mind and his person to the most humiliating discipline, and his life itself to the greatest danger? Reason, justice and humanity unite in protesting against fo extravagant a proceeding."

* See "Extract of a letter from the fecretary of state, to James Monroe, Esq. dated 5th January, 1804.

It has been stated in congress, and is a fact which cannot be denied, that in the short space of two years (since the commencement of the present war Great Britain has impressed three thousand of our seamen, whom, at this moment, she detains in captivity. The annexed lift of impressments, procured from the office of the secretary of state, is a sufficient proof of the This lift forms a record of truth of this statement. outrage and injustice, unexampled in the history of modern times. It is a melancholy proof, (if proof were required of a fact so universally known) that our country has received the groffest insults and the most vital injuries; insults and injuries which loudly call upon the government for redrefs, and which it is bound to redrefs, whatever dangers or difficulties it may be necessary to encounter, in order to obtain reparation. Notwithstanding the repeated remonstances of our government to Great Britain, on this fubject, she still persists in this system of maritime kidnapping, with unremitting feverity. Every day is ushered and closed with some new instance of oppression. Not a vessel arrives in any port of the continent which does not reiterate the complaints of our gallant countrymen. It has been eloquently observed by a member of the general government, that "the groans of our impressed fellow citizens mingle with the murmurs of every gale from the ocean."*

* Mr. Elliot. This gentleman and a few others, particularly Mr. Crowninshield, Mr. Clay, Mr. Nicholson, Mr. Gregg, and Mr. Sloan, merit the thanks and gratitude of American seamen, for the lively interest they have taken in their cause, and the resolutions they have brought forward to essentiate a speedy redress of their sufferings. We are forry to find, that a leading member from an important state in the Union, who could so feelingly sympathise in the sufferings of a coverised traitor, that not extensive

+ Fries.

There is not a failor on board an American vesself, whether lying in a port accessible to British ships, or traversing the ocean, who is not in perpetual danger of sharing the fate of his unfortunate countrymen. Whether he is a father, a husband, a brother or a child, on whom perhaps an helpless family depends for subsistence, he cannot be sure that he will escape in this general scene of oppression and injustice.

Surely then it is time to take efficient measures to stop the further progress of this wide spreading calamity, and to vindicate the violated rights of our country. We have already drunk a copious draught of national degradation, and have purchased by our apathy the privilege of repentance. Let us now, at least, though late, remember that while we render justice to other nations, we should not forget to do justice to ourselves: and that when our rights are invaded, we should act with promptness, energy and decision. To suffer the present session of Congress to close without adopting efficient measures to procure the immediate liberation of our impressed seamen, would be justly considered a tacit acquiescence under the present system of British oppression. Our government might as well, at once, declare in the language of treachery, but of truth, that they withdrew all protection from a numerous body of the ployed the enviable talents he possesses in the cause of our injured seamen. We recommend to this gentleman's frequent perusal the line of the poet: " Homo fun, humani nihil a me alienum  $p_{Max}$ " community, the American feamen, and tell them, that "although you have an indisputable claim upon us to vindicate your rights, and although the nation has derived incalculable advantages from your exertions, and has hitherto flourished by your enterprise, yet we feel no solicitude for your personal interests; and prefer to facrifice your freedom, and compromit the dignity of our national character, to the danger of incurring the frowns of the minions of St. James'.

Oh! may fuch fentiments never be harboured, as they dare not be expressed by the rulers of a free and enlightened people.

We cannot, however, believe, that there is a member of our national councils who does not reciprocate our fentiments on this distressing and humiliating subject. If, however, there be one among that body, whose bosom does not heave, and whose heart does not bleed, at the recital of the sufferings of his impressed fellow citizens, let him, we beseech him, for a moment suppose, that he hears the heartfelt shrieks of the miserable wise piercing his ears, and entreating him in accents of rage and despair, to restore to her her impressed husband, the father of her children, and her only support. Let him view, in imagination, the aged and helpless parent, in accents of sinking woe, misery and distress, bewailing the loss of a dutiful and beloved son; and if he is not filled with horror and indignation at the various ills and miseries inslicted and inslicting, contrary to every principle of law, justice, and humanity, on our impressed fellow citizens, then has he the heart of a tyger, and the spirit of a sycophant.

But we will not, we cannot, for the honour of our country believe, that our government will contemplate unmoved the fufferings of a brave and deferving body of men, or that they will fuffer them any longer to languish in captivity. We trust that the national spirit is not dead but sleepeth, and hope that before the close of the present session it will wake from its slumber. It has indeed motives which might ferve "to warm an ague's frost," to rouse it to resistance.

It is not our defire to inflame the passions of our fellow citizens; but we would impress them with a fense of their national interests and honour. We entertain no narrow prejudices against Great Britain as a nation; but we feel an honest indignation at the insults she has offered to, and the injuries she has inflicted on our country; as the friends of civilization and literature we must wish her every legitimate success. She has been for many ages the great magazine of arts, the favourite abode of science, and the prolific parent of exalted genius; and it gives us pain to reslect, that by her maritime depredations, the has tarnished her glory and sullied her renown. We should be forry to see her conquered, but we would wish to see her restrained; we consider her a neceilary barrier to the unbounded ambition of her contiguous rival, and fincerely hope that she will terminate her contest with him, with honor to herself and advantage to Europe: but if, however, the period of her dissolution is at hand, which we devoutly deprecate, let her not, like a falling tower, involve others in her ruin.

Having now, though but imperfectly, discharged a duty which we assumed on ourselves from the most disinterested motives, and to which we were prompted by the critical situation of our country, we have only to obtest the government to vindicate, by speedy, temperate, but firm measures, the outraged dignity of the nation. To shew to the world that if we have long suffered wrongs we are now determined to repel them; and that if we have hitherto been solicitous for peace, it is not because we are weak or timid, but because we are actuated by moderation and humanity.

Should, however, the numberless instances of national indignity and individual oppression to which we have so long submitted, neither dislipate the apathy, nor command the interposition of the government, in vain do we boast of the superiority of our constitution over those of other nations; a constitution which has hitherto been an object of envy and admiration to the civilized world: and the lover of his country will see with regret this beautiful fabrick, raised with so much care, and cemented by so much patriot blood, afford another melancholly proof of the instability of human institutions: its foundations will be shaken and its beauty tarnished, and it would not be a false though distressing anticipation to pronounce, that the period is not far distant when it will cease to command the support or solicitude of freemen.

The writer of these remarks ardently prays, that such painful anticipations may never be suffilled; and in veneration of our noble constitution, sincerely exclaims in the dying words of Father Paul to his country, esto perpetua.

A STATEMENT

Of applications made to the British Government, in cases of Impressments, from the 1st September, 1804, to 11th May 1805, by George W. Erwing, esquire.

Thomas Moody John Cotrill John Maguire Tames White John Gilmore Benjamin Chaloner Robert Oakes John Harcum Henry Stone Charles King Peter Thomson Edward Steward Jonathan Archer George Warberton John Tucker John M'Kaig John Ilsley James Millon Thomas Irwin William Innis Daniel Brown John or Thomas Howes Daniel Ross Thomas Morris George Horne George Watson John Lean or John Lion William Aiken Henry Knight Wm. Ackley or Ashley Thomas Freeman Hiram Candy or Kennedy

Tofeph Duke Gobble Robert Crosbie William Nugent Dower Carfon Philip Lyman Abm. Hanaird John Johnson John White Robert Corbin John Norris John Morris George Gibson William Buck Thomas White Joseph Masters Thomas Forbes Peter Forrest William Hunter William Finlay John Thompson Peter M'Caw George Withurn Jos. Thompson Daniel Newburry Josh. Brown Andrew Mansfield Thomas Challis Geo. Hilbert or Starbert William Remmick, alias

Gyer

John Johnson James Walsh Jonathan Emery John Taylor George Kamat or Kennat Samuel M'Crea Joseph Wildman Benjamin Pass James Manning James Cothe or Cotrel James Baker Francis Lemott Andrew Anderson Henry Parker Andrew Tucker Thos. Harvey or Harney John Edwards Andrew Kuhn John Johnson George Walker Francis M. Migoer, or Miligan Joseph Godfrey, or God-Peter Dolman fe y Peter Robinson Ebenezer Compton James Edmonds John Smith Martin Colford John, alias James Brown Peter Newlan John Johnson John Barry Thomas Harvey John Williams Joseph Thomson Daniel Johnson John Plymouth John Stewart Joseph Wills

John Jackson John D. Swift Jettro Fowler Efau Dominick James Gesson Jonathan Cook James Reid Liff Young Gerard Harfins Thomas Aikin George Wabby Richard Hiett Andrew Hyer Joseph Melena Samuel B. Spencer James Conolly John Rendels John Bradley John or Thos. M'Donald Reuben Bessell John Haniford James Brown Thomas Earle William Davis Richard Dawson Blake Peircy Thomas Jackson Peter Cossin John Johnson or Jones William Barnes Thomas Sheffield Richard Reed James Harris

John Johnson Daniel S. Martin George Woods Wm. alias Thos. Barnes William Jones Daniel Merideth Ebenezer Pinkham Samuel Matton John Grant William Brown William Butby Daniel Dixon Martin Hellet Jonathan or John Hackett James White John Owens Tames M'Clackland John Miller Thomas Pennock Edward Pipping Joseph Peirson John Smith John Robinson Peter Harris Tames Featherstone William Sculla William Mines Charles Robinson William James Henry Weeks Francis Thompson John Hathaway John Downey Philip Ford, alias Caroline John Brack, alias Brock William Godfrey Joisph Williams William Wilfon

Tacob Abbin Robert Fielding Joseph Stack Joseph Coles Eliphat Ruffel William Shanks Richard Wilson William Bray John M'Avoy George Watson William Greene Edward Spencer Dennis or Daniel Carney Peter Lauries or Lewis Samuel Mitchell Samuel Bailey Thos. Knight or Wright John Edwards James Long Richard Shays Benedict A. Butler Thomas Brown Iames Thomas William Simpson William Johnson Thomas Parfons Joseph Trowbridge William Taylor Peter Wilfon Andrew Scott William Johns or Wilmuth Johnson Benjamin Mosley Manuel Depra John Biercroft Christopher Docou

John King George Wood George Slater Daniel Hearn William Bufkell John Clements Benjamin Hunt William Wilfon John Dunn Alexander Black Urquhar Fogerty John Hyde William Harvey William Moultry John King John M'Gee Charles Lymburg James Robinfon Thomas Southeck Elias Wood Samuel Lockwood John Norberry Abraham Hodfon Alexander Payne Rowd. Peirce Barns. Norris Joseph L. Wilson Thomas Wright Ruft Backer William Smith Charles Pettingel John Thomson George Mars Thomas S. Pollock Thomas Woods George Buntick Joseph Mucklewaine

George Robinson Charles Bushnell John Pumus John Greene Nicholas Boylfton Thomas Jackson John Hays, alias John Williams Robert Hudging Frederick Jones John Davis William Watts Philip Keg John Finley Robert Cook William Kegs William Cozzens Henry Jackson Charles T. Gould William Hughes Martin Hynes James Drifkell Lindsey Heady George Farrington Henry Jackson Chas. Bowen or Brown Benjamin Hatch Thomas R. Green John G. Olin Seth Barton John Smith George Tabb Enoch Roberts Joshua Small Joseph Lewis Thomas Williams William Thompson

George A. Avery Robert Elliott J-rome Napivet Matthew Brown Reuben M.Kinfey Muffee Day Simon Day Peter Baker, alias Peter Scott George Smith Christr. Tillinghast William Loofely Abram Williams Edward Moodie Michael Gill Samuel Tufts Ephraim M'Intire John Thomas James Carson Robert Dow, jun. Cuthbert Gill Samuel Hodges John Trusty John Williams George Collins Dennis Welsh Benjamin Roundy Augustus Lafarch John Baker Clement Coffin James Neale Daniel Greene James Kelly Jesse or John Gray or Grayless Robert Coulson

Thomas Fowley James Gardner Daniel Teal George Williams John Joy Benjamin Linsey William Clark Joseph Price John Childs John Mayor Henry Niles Henry Stone Jesse Emmons Ebenezer Carter William Hall Major Smith Peter Harvey Abram Lott Bristow Jackson or John-Benjamin Rogers William Townsend Robert Craig Jacob Blake John Donaldson Joseph Thompson Charles Lewis Levi Hall Joseph or Thos. Jiunichet Middleton Bartley Tames Pitcher Caleb Smith John Jackson John Reiley Ebenezer Turner William Simpfon

Charles Lowe, alias Love Robert M'Gurdy James Cox William Smith Charles Lobban Thomas Foreman George Weaver John Elliott David Watts William Hard John S. Murray John Frainer Robert Bauentine Joseph Namer Alexander Adams

Wm. Spencer or Spence John Arenberg James Smithar Eleazer D. Bray John Smith Alexander Waddy B. S. Caldwell Thomas Gauslin Samuel Cooper Gilbert Abraham Morgan Peter Smith

STATEMENT

Of applications made to the British Government, in cases of. Impressments from the 18th May to the 26th September, 1805, by William Lyman, esquire.

John Whitehead Thomas Frazer Daniel M'Millan William Bryant William M'Collister Thomas Lane John Baines David Griffin John Rose or Ross Joseph Frazer David Newark John Richie William French John Lock

William Pitt Oliver John West Samuel Shephard Samuel Larcbee Martin Pain James Kinsley James Fowler John Smith John Davis John Dixion John Webster Daniel Robertson William White William Duay

John Hederick Joseph Rowlan John Rhoads Martin Wolf Thomas Griffiths Caleb Starkens James Smith William Gibbs James Murray Joseph Reid Samuel Bunker James Minzies Absalom Simkins Daniel Paine Matthew Dawson Jonathan Medley Daniel Williams James Dingey Thomas Goodwin Caro Decasta John Connor James Burnes Alexander Downey John Murray John Scheib John S. Colburn Jera. Williams Enoch Newcomb William Clough Philip Conroy Edward Billingfman Daniel Patterson James Smith John Davis Thoma: Congdon Daniel French Peter Sergeant

Benjamin Davidson William Rhodes Charles Kennedy Henry Manchester James Butler John Hunt John Cook William Ricraft John Dennis Christopher Beckman Thomas Osborn William Breton William Stockdale William Atlen William Parrott William Weatherland John Handley Robert Rogers Edward Barry John Vincent Thomas Smith John Smith Thomas Mooney John Borney James Guy John Lucker Lemuel Beale Robert Morris George Wood John Rolla Thomas Walds Gilbert Lowen Thomas Sanxton Thomas — John Thomas West Jeffe Boyd John Brown

William Witham
John Hatton
Richard Lifle
William Watts
Thomas Bowyer
Jofeph Burnes
John Scott
James Banister
John Multhrop
John Gordon
John Drifcoil
Samuel L. Sherman
John Brown

Anthony Huisler
William Eaton
Richard P Tongue
Wm Sharr, alias Shaw
Michael Hewitt
Robert Morney
William Summers
Jonathan Curtis
Adam Brown
Thomas Boyd
Robert Warnock
Wm. Burnham, jun.

STATEMENT

Of applications in cases of Impressment, made immediately to the Department of State, and not before reported to the House of Representatives, or included in Mr. Erving's or Mr. Lyman's returns to this office.

John Atkinfon
Martin Akens
Sylvanus Alford
Henry Killburn
Elijah Armstrong
Atten John
James Allen
Wm. Aubin
Bennet Ashford
Antonio J. Rogers
Jamer Allen
Ed. Lowry
Thomas Allen
Jas. Davidson

George Weir Samuel Bishop James Chambers John Croit John Beatty Daniel Campbell John M'Connagy Andrew Anderson Thomas Frost Thomas Randal John Patterson Wm. Bayle John Outerside Robert Blaway

Jenkin Killan John Patterson John Woolridge Wm. Brown John Buffington Geo. Burns Tames Barber Josh. Baker Enoch Clark Josh. Bartlett John Blackburn John Anderson Wm. Ryfell John Bloomfer Geo. Bradshaw Tames Brown Thomas Born Samuel Breede Jost Butler John Bishop Nathan P. Brook Abram Myers John Burk William Brown David Baxter David Burk John Bolt lames Brown William Newton John Courtney Francis Cossin, jun. Henry Cobb Thomas Clark Joseph Clancy Thomas Cox Laurence Clark John Clark

Samuel Bunker Amos Thop Jacob Beird Henry Beauman Thomas Butler George Bryant John B. Brown Malcolm Bruce John Bowman Laurence Brown John Blume John Evans Joseph L. Worthy Thomas Knapp David Brown Robert Brown Noah Becks William Gray Joseph Beal John Bar Charles Brown John Brown Andrew Clow William Calvert Hugh Harris Robert Williams John Harman Jere. Culver Robert Carther John Clark Thomas Cook George Wilson Caleb Carr Peter Coyle John Coleman James Cullimore Robert Thomson

Henry Christ William Cox Patrick Cunningham ---- Croreston John Campbell Thomas Doyle Ed. Ryly John Dixon John Davis Michael Davis John Dixfon Peter Devering James Macray John Douglas Josiah Doane John English William Shepperd Michael Davis John Frazer John Francis George Fisher Flenny John Ed. Girrells Griggs James Garven John Neal Walter Holliday John Holmes Henry Hall John Howard William Hopkins Samuel Hodges William Hall Thomas Holland Josh. Hunt Thomas Hutton George Hutton James Hart

Daniel Carmichael John Crawford James Deane Haac Day Isaac Dick James Davis Henry Wood Thomas Denney John Chamberlain John Thompson John Eaton John Edwards John Erving Joseph Ellingwood John Edwards Amos Follansbee Barnet Foland George Frazer Richard Thomas John Manuel Martin George James Giles Caleb Hastings D. M. Hogan John Harlam Patrick Hollohan Hyer Godfrey Patrick Hogarty Samuel D. Hayle Jacob Heller Edward Killum Frederick Kline James Kennard James Kennedy D· H. Ketcham George Manning Leonard Johnson

James Love Nathaniel York Jacob Connel John Shaw George Atkinson Ed. Simpson Nathaniel Moore Elisha Markam James Matthews James Mash Ed. Mooney Philip Miligan Richard F. Moore George Manning William Mount Elisha Morris Peter Douglas Henry Matthews William Morro Nathaniel Mosher John M'Donald Andrew M'Donald John M'Evoy William Moore Matthew Barton William Mason John Webster Henry Mayo George Sterving Jos. Cornelius Benjamin Moales John Martin William Clark William Orr Peter Lawlefs William M'Clure Peter Anderson

James Jones James Johnson Abel Sifcol William Jones James Johnson Samuel Johnson Richard Johnson Leonard Johnson George Atkins John Dixon John Smith William Warner Azor, an indented fervant In. C. Davis John Westerby John Shelton Samuel Ingle John Johnson Samuel Jackson Thomas Jones Oliver Blackwith John Taylor Thomas Jackson John Jackson Gridley Lewis Daniel Landerkin, jun. William Leeman William Liddle G. H. Christian Jos. Anthony Charles Thompson Samuel Litchfield John Little James Whitney Abrm. Linard Eugene Elmstead Ruffel Davenport

Robert Allen John Jacobs John Odlin Anthony Powers George Pinder James Pointer John Prin John Planton William Pitman Tohn Potter John Portland James Robbins Henry Pearson Josh Pearson John Parker Henry Palmatre Robert Deighton George Fleming Wılliam Park George Pender John Peters, jun-David Porter John H. Rictout Samuel Robinson Christian Moldenham Christian Lowman Richard Rimmer John Rudemaker Stephen Rumsey Thomas Rogers Ole Hanson Johan Lozawat Hans Davidson William Robbins Thomas Robinfon James Overton Thomas Weeks

John Simonfort John Sheany Josh. Snow, a mate William Smith Daniel Talmage Andrew Stagpole John Andrews John Tillinghaft Charles Smith  ${f W}$ illiam Smit ${f h}$ Charles Stewart John Shaw John Backam John Roberts William Cole James Jones Thomas Wood Thomas Wife Robert Smith John G. Zenas William Watson Luke White Wallace Hans Loverty Samuel Wells John White John Williams Philip Squires Francis Cox Leonard Findley Thomas R. Green Teffe Cadwell Andrew Ewell Ed. Averell. Ed. Hayes Joshua Wright William Brown

Robert Williams John Ward James White William Stanley John Williams Joseph White John H. Swinns John Spiers Tristham Spencer Alexander Stanton Otrick Barnwell Luther Tracy Andrew Moore Samuel Moore Francis Davis William Thomas John Schneider, jun. John Sebaston William Tucker

Henry Pearson George Alho John Bell Charles Davis Freeman Swain Patrick Welsh William Skinner William Smith Robert Brown Samuel Howard Andrew Richee William Right Jack Bowier Samuel Gain Thomas Auld Thomas Williams Joseph Murrall James Cornish John Williams

STATEMENT

Of Impressed Seamen, made by William Savage, Esquire, to the Department of State.

James Stanford
Thomas Crammer
John Pearson
William Brown
William Anthony, jun.
John G. Seraston
Nathaniel Huston
Joshua L. Worthy

William Robbins
John Steward
Michael Wales
William M'Donald
John Davis
Martin Woolfe
Robert Thomfpon
Daniel Teill

John Marihall William Pickering John Murray James Morgan Edward Buckingham Littleton Warren John Dennis Thomas Flour John Cook — Burns Christopher Beekman Thomas Ratcliff Peter Holmes Peter Ribble William Cripps Archibald Fisher

Daniel Whitehouse Gordon Minet John Thomson William Byroft John Hunt John Smith Stephen Hall Robert Masters Freeman Swain Elias Dickinson Thomas Behell Holster Fowle James Smith Stephen Bradbury Aaron Dill

By the same statement it appears, that on the 3d May, 1804, three passengers from Galway, in Ireland, to New York, were impressed into the British frigate Cambrian

In the month of June of the same year, three passengers were impressed into the British sloop of war Driver.

On the 13th July of the same year, six passengers from Liverpool, were impressed into the frigate Cambrian.

In August of the same year, eighteen passengers, from Belfast, in Ireland, were impressed into the same frigate

In the same month, thirteen passengers, from the same place, were impressed into the British sloop of war Hawk.

Altogether, making forty-three passengers taken from American vessels.

It may not be improper to add another instance of impressment, in that of sourteen seamen, and one passenger, from the British ship Pitt, on the 17th June, 1804, in the harbour of New York, by the British frigate Cambrian.

The Statement of Impressments of American Seamen into the British Service, laid before Congress on the 19th January, 1805, contains a list of feventeen hundred and thirty-three seamen. That statement contained the names of such persons only as had made application to be released; and it may fairly be inferred, that there were as many more impressed, who had not an opportunity of applying to our government, or any of its agents, for redress, FINIS.

ERRATA.

Page 3, line 22, for illicit, read elicite; page 7, 2d line from the bottom, for property, read profperity; page 8, 18th line, for native born, read natural born; page 28, note 7th, for Bynkershook, read Bynkershoek; page 34, 9th line, for Cooke, read Coke.

COPY-RIGHT SECURED ACCORDING TO LAW.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS